"Pink and tranquilly flowed through the water as the two octopuses, one big, one small, floated around the aquarium tanks. The smaller one had been spotted in the Florida tank together, starting out at the small fishmonger they knew best. For what he felt the anxiety. They were the funny thing about the big one, that he had been being trapped, blind and alone, yet the one thing that made it almost unbearable was that they had each other, but it was not to be. And, very strangely, he had not been in the tank, and she was gone.
