

Wren 300

Building London: Romans, Wren and London today.

After completing our history topic all about the Romans in Britain, Year 4 took part in a Wren 300 workshop, celebrating the architecture of London as part of the 300th anniversary of Christopher Wren's death.

We visited lots of buildings in central London and looked at the architecture. We discussed the differences between Roman, Greek and modern architecture.

In the afternoon, we used compasses and map making skills to follow a route that led us to St. Paul's Cathedral.

We were lucky enough to visit The London Mithraeum, also known as the Temple of Mithras. This is a Roman Mithraeum that was discovered in Walbrook, a street in the City of London, during a building's construction in 1954.
